I. LITERATURE AND THE ENVIRONMENT

Environmental groups, artistic communities, and institutions defending the rights of the environment have all been concerned with the topic of the environmental impact suffered by the planet due to overpopulation, consumerism, uncontrolled exploitation of resources and climate change.

Has this environmental problem been addressed in the community of Hispanic literary writers? If so, what were the impacts and the responses?

Here are some of the suggested topics:

- Ecoliterature or Ecocriticism and literary genres.
- The topic against Ecoliterature or Ecocriticism.
- The market for Ecoliterature or Ecocriticism.
- The environment as a literary theme.
- Literary works by Hispanic writers on the environment.
- The environment in children's literature.

II. HEROINES IN HISPANIC LITERATURE

Patriarchal conditions in human history have also influenced the literary field. In this sense, “man as a hero,” was the central figure of world literature; however, in recent decades, women have been positioning themselves as leading characters in literature. This shows a broad advance in the understanding of the capabilities and problems faced by women in society.

Is this the female figure as heroine present in Hispanic literature? If so, how?

- The female figure as heroine in literature
- Hispanic women writers and their usage of heroines in their literary work
- Realistic heroines: Do the heroines presented in Latin American literature portray a real/realistic component?
- Defining the real heroine to represent women in Latin America.
- Unforgettable heroines of world literature

III. PERSPECTIVES

We are in a golden age for the dissemination and publication of works worldwide. In this context we should analyze and discuss the following: What is the reality experienced by male writers and female writers in their respective markets? To delve into the subject and learn about different aspects of the publishing world today, these issues can be presented in written form:

- Female writers in modern literature.
- Two fronts: Male and female writers in modern literature.
- The current status of poetry and successful strategies for promoting the sale of poetry books.
- Reading clubs.
- The autobiographical novel in literature written by women.
- The line between erotica and pornographic literature.
- Men who write about women.
- Translation of works in Spanish to English and vice versa.
- The social function of literature.

IV. LITERARY MAGAZINES

Magazines and newspapers appeared in the eighteenth century and spread quickly in various corners of the world. Many of the characters of history owe their power to the use made of the print media in which they were announced as intellectuals, writers, poets, grammarians, journalists and politicians. Countries like France, Spain, Argentina, Mexico and Colombia were part of that boom in literary magazines that not only reached prestige and power, but also were the stage for the greatest thinkers and writers of time. The landscape has changed thanks to technology and has allowed magazines to broaden their audience of readers. This growth has also led to an increase in writers being able to promote their work. But in this apparently growing market, what is the reality faced by Hispanic literary magazines?

In this context, we wish to call on the literary magazines to be part of the important topics to be discussed during the XII EIE.

V. AUTHORS, PLATFORMS AND WRITERS ORGANIZATIONS

During the XII EIDE, we appreciate the participation of persons wishing to submit papers focused on the following topics:

- Success stories of authors publishing in Amazon.
- Successful stories in sales of electronic books.
- What every writer should know about the today's publishing world.
- Publishing and literary crossover.
- The world of Amazon and other platforms.
- Hispanic writer's organizations and initiatives led by women and their impact in their communities.

We will have presentations in English and Spanish for both audiences.
